Stop Vivisection Canada! Campaign: 5 Ways to Cruelty Free Research

1. Access to Information

Requests for information to universities and the Canadian Council on Animal Care (CCAC) have been denied. The CCAC was incorporated as a non-profit and independent body in 1982. They manage a voluntary control program. In Canada taxpayers and donors cannot get information that is available under federal disclosure laws for US vivisection laboratories. This includes information about the research laboratories, the experimental procedures, the number of animals and the copies of CCAC inspection reports. In addition, the US Animal Welfare Act mandates research standards. In Canada it is out of sight, out of mind for the multi-billion dollar vivisection industry. The Canadian government must permit greater access to Information about vivisection and implement a phase-out plan.

4. Glass Walls Challenge

This is a challenge to open the labs to show the public ALL experiments on animals. Let the public decide. It has always been the goal of Lifeforce to show people what happens behind closed doors. The taxpayers and those who donate are entitled to the information in order to make informed decisions. Our nonviolent investigations gives the public the opportunity to see the truth.

5. "Stop Vivisection Canada!" Postcard Lobby for Cruelty Free Research

The Lifeforce post card campaign urges politicians to give taxpayers greater access to vivisection information and to set a goal of 10% reduction of "animal models" annually. Canadians can send this on line postcard to their Federal Member of Parliament and Provincial Government politicians. Post cards will also be available at public events for Canadians to send to their MP at no cost.
